The Lord said to Noah,
"There's an ark you must build."
So Noah got real busy
And did as God willed.

"Noah must be crazy!"
His neighbors all said.
"A boat in the desert?"
Noah's out of his head!"

Soon the earth would be covered
With water, God knew,
Each forest and meadow
And mountaintop too.

it grieved God to have
To destroy all mankind,
For Noah was the only
Good man God could find.

"The heavens will open!
The rains will begin.
So open the door Noah!
You must in vite in . . ."

"A jungle of creatures,
They'll come two by two,
And you'll be a keeper
Of this floating zoo."

Noah's Ark

The animals lined up.
They entered in pairs.
There were monkeys and
elephants,
Lions and bears . . .

Nanny goats, lizards,
And kangaroos too,
Ostriches, pigeons,
(Some walked, and some flew!)

Pandas and crocodiles
All went aboard.
And critter food quantities
Quickly were stored.

When the very last creature
Had entered the ark,
The rain started pouring.
The sky became dark.

The water rose high.
But Noah and his critters
Stayed totally dry.

For forty long days
And forty nights too,
They floated along
In that ultimate zoo.

Then the rain finally stopped.
And very carefully,
Noah opened a window
And set a dove free.

He waited and watched
For what seemed like a wEEK.
And that dove, it returned
With a leaf in its beak!

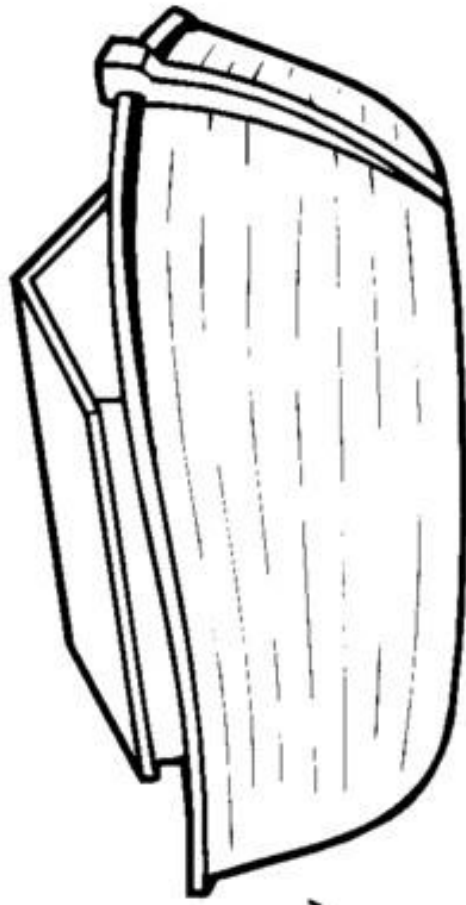

When the ark finally landed,
Noah opened the door,
And the animals, ex-cited,
Rushed onto the shore.

Then God made a promise.
"Noah, look way up high!
You will see a bright rainbow
Up there in the sky!"

So, Noah offered thanks,
Said good-bye to his zoo.
And went forth to live
In a world that was new!
